Leadership

The definition of leadership is a person who has commanding authority or influence over others. Some of the characteristics of someone in a leadership role is someone who is trusting, enthusiastic, a motivator, and has a good attitude.

Some aspects that a coach should try and obtain is to: Have respect for those under their supervision, use fairness, listen to the athletes, use positive discipline, teach the athlete, and take suggestions and ideas.

There are two examples of leaders. First there are leaders that lead by example. These people show that they are leaders. They are the positive role models and do what they say. Second. There are leaders that lead vocally. They are the ones that use their voice to get the players to do what they want.

Some of the principles of being a leader is that there is credit given to people that deserve it. The concept of teamwork works best. There is the constant strive for responsibility and self-improvement. Leaders also set the example.

Some characteristics of leaders are that they: have a passion for sport, have passion for athletes, have a deep knowledge of the game, take suggestions from others, are caring, have determination and dedication, and are positive role models.